BOURBON WHISKEY

ALL BOURBON IS WHISKEY, BUT NOT ALL WHISKEY IS BOURBON!

For a whiskey to be called a Bourbon, it must follow the below rules.

- 1) It must be made in ANY U.S. state or territory.
- 2) It must be made from a grain mixture of minimum 51% corn.
- 3) Aged in charred virgin oak containers.
- 4) Distilled no higher than 80% A.B.V.
- 5) Entered into the oak container and no higher than 62.5% A.B.V
- 6) Bottled no lower than 40% A.B.V (for American release)

To be considered a "Straight" whiskey it must also be aged for a minimum 2 years, but must have a listed age statement if aged less than 4 years. It also must not contain any additives or colourings.

*To be considered a "BONDED" whiskey, it must follow all of the above laws, It also must be distilled in 1 distillation season "January-June or July-December" by one distillery and one distiller.

TENNESSEE WHISKEY

To be considered a "Tennessee" whiskey.

It must follow all the rules in the above "Bourbon" section, however it must also:

- 1) Be distilled in the state of Tennessee.
- 2) The whiskey must be produced using the "Lincoln County Process" - The whiskey must be "steeped or in" charcoal chips BEFORE aging.

RYE WHISKEY

Before there was bourbon, there was rye whiskey.

Rye is a winter grain and prefers colder climates.

When America was first settled, rye grain was the grain of choice for farmers, so what did they do with all the left over grain? Turn it into whiskey!

Rye whiskey production in America must follow the same rules as Bourbon, however, the grain mixture must contain a minimum of 51% rye grain.

Rye has a spicy and peppery quality, we call it the "flavour maker grain".
